So, it's cold outside. Why do our helicopters perform better in cold weather? Simply,colder air is more dense than warmer air, which contributes to engine performance & air lift. It's not actually that helicopters fly better in cold air; it's that the engines produce more power.

This story about the Thai cave rescue is absolutely bananas. I had no idea they found an anesthetist who is also a world class cave diver who put all the kids to sleep for the actual rescue dive? macleans.ca/thai-cave-resc...

A word about sedation. A word, too, about Dr. Harry.

Anaesthesiology requires more training than most branches of medicine; there is always some risk that when a patient is put under, he or she will never wake up. When the patient is a child, the risks are greater. When the child is yanked along underwater for hours through a dark, cold cave, the risks are incalculable—no one has ever done anything like this before.

Dr. Harry believes the risks of sedating the children beat the risks of not sedating the children. The lead divers believe the same, and the Thais believe the experts know best. The children cannot dive; the children will panic; the children will drown their rescuers and themselves. That is why Dr. Harry is going to do this: inject 12 kids with a sedative so powerful it will knock them out cold.

Ketamine: a horse tranquilizer, an operating-room drug, a soon-to-be cave-rescue pharmaceutical product in its early testing stages on rock-entombed human minors.

If only it were so simple. The children's drugs will need to be topped up with half-doses along the way. Dr. Harry cannot dive every child out himself, but the divers are not medical doctors. Dr. Harry must give a dozen cave hobbyists and small-business owners a crash course in do-it-yourself anaesthesiology.

you can point gun left or right - up or down - $180 \times 180 = 32,400$ to hit bullseye you probably need to aim within 10 degree X 10 degree = 100 $32,400 / 100 = 324$
by my lame calculation there was 1 in 324 chances that a random shot of a gun would hit someone in the chest

The Senate is now taking two procedural, roll call votes on competing plans to re-open the government.

The current vote is on the GOP plan.

The second vote is on the Democratic plan.

Both need 60 years to cut off debate. Neither plan is expected to score 60 years.

With all the talk about Russia's UCAV today & people wondering where the U.S. stands on it, please, if you only read one thing from me, read this. It tears apart the history of the revolutionary tech, how the USAF buried it and why that's a huge problem:

The Alarming Case Of The USAF's Mysteriously Missing Unmanned ...

The USAF has them but isn't telling us they do, or they don't. Either way we are in trouble. Here's why.
